HOW TO...
WRITE A REVIEW

It is good for artists to know how their work affects other people. They can learn a lot from reviews even if they are critical, it helps them improve. But don't be unkind (think how you would feel if people wrote unkind or unhelpful reviews of your work)

Writing reviews is about telling people what you think about things you have seen or heard. This can be fun to do.

You can do it in all sorts of ways...

Top tip: It's great to do reviews in any way that suits you.

You can use emojis like these to show your feelings

You can draw or paint a picture to show your experience

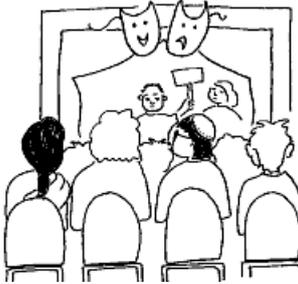

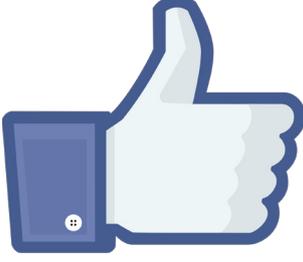

You could even get someone to film you talking about the show or event

Top tip: Above all, be honest.

Top tip: Don't leave it too long before doing your review.

If you're short of ideas, or you are writing for a magazine or blog and need to think about how they like reviews to be structured, here are a few ideas that might help:

Top tip: You might want to add things about what it was like for you going to see it - was it easy to find? Were the staff friendly? Was the place confusing? Was it comfortable? Was it too loud?

	How will you remember what you saw? Will you write some notes or take some photos?		How did it make you feel?
	Make sure you let people know what it is you are writing about		Think about how it looked – there might be lighting, costumes or themes to write about.
	Don't try to say everything. Pick out the big stuff. What would you say to a friend?		What did you like about it?
	Think about what the artist/company was trying to say. Did they say it well?		Were there things you did not like about it?
